PLANT NEWZ

On the 18th of March, 1981, five botanists from Wyoming and one from Colorado sent two petitions to the Fish and Wildlife Service Office of Endangered Species (FWS-OES) in Washington, D.C. Both Sphaeromeria simplex and Agrostis rossiae were candidate species listed in the recent Federal Register of December 15, 1980, as category 1. This category is the FWS-OES highest ranking for species to be considered for listing. A response from FWS-OES on May 1, 1981, replied that they intended to proceed with proposing these species for listing (?). The rulemaking packages needed to list these species were prepared for these species one year ago. Hopefully, something will happen in the near future.

The Natural Resources Defense Council recently sent us a memo on proposed changes in the Lacey Act, which protects wildlife. The Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works recently passed an amendment changing the criminal penalty provisions to insure that minor or inadvertant violators are not penalized too severely. These portions apply to plants as well. This amendment has won the support of all major conservation organizations, state fish and game agencies and the National Rifle Assoc., and deserves our support as well. The next hurdle is the Senate Judiciary committee, which must consider the Lacey Act Amendments before 11 June. Opponents feel that the penalties are still too strong.

Quoting from the NRDC memo: "It would probably be best to support the bill in general and not to emphasize the new plant provisions in order to avoid creating controversy over them. It is crucial that this (Judiciary) Committee report the bill out promptly with no changes. Please write to members of the Committee, listed below, in support of the bill. Once again, it is probably best not to draw attention to the plant provisions, with one very important exception. DeConcini, who is co-sponsoring the bill because it will assist Arizona's cactus cops, should be warned that an amendment proposed by Symms (Idaho) yesterday would have the effect of eliminating Arizona's (and neighboring states') cactus permit programs from Lacey Act protection. These programs are not endangered species acts, so they are currently included only because cacti are on the CITES appendices. Symms proposed that Lacey not cover species protected by other Federal law, including CITES. Senator Thurmond may offer a similar amendment in the Judiciary Committee. Simpson and Baucus have already supported the bill in the Environment and Public Works Committee; you may wish to urge them to remain steadfast."

Western states' senators in the Judiciary Committee: Paul Laxalt, Nev; Orrin Hatch, Utah; Alan Simpson, Wyo; Dennis DeConcini, Ariz; and Max Baucus, Mont. They can all be addressed at the Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.
